

Have you ever needed to communicate with your dive buddy under water?

Waiting until your surface interval just to communicate can be frustrating. Whether you are having a problem or just want to point out something cool, keeping good communication with your buddy can make the difference between an “okay” dive and a “great” fun and safe dive.

Communication alternatives have limitations.

There are many forms of underwater communication on the market today, such as specialized gear and slates. Special gear is very expensive. Using slates can be awkward and slow. Even the hand signals commonly taught lack an adequate vocabulary to truly communicate effectively. Hand signals also can vary widely between agencies which can create confusion between two divers trained by different agencies.

SeaSigns is simple, inexpensive, and of broad scope.

SeaSigns offers a simple and inexpensive solution. Based on American Sign Language we have created a special vocabulary for scuba divers that is easy to learn and easy to use. Our vocabulary is much broader in scope than other hand signal methods. Receive a BC tag which identifies you as a certified SeaSigner. Possibly meet people with whom you can sign while diving. The classroom part of the Safety Signing Diver class requires about 4 hours classroom time to learn all 110 signs - if students have prepared by watching the video.

Approved by scuba certifying agencies.

SeaSigns Safety Signing Diver class has been approved as a specialty course by PADI, SSI, SDI, NAUI, YMCA, NASE, and IAHD, recommended by HSA. This makes SeaSigns the most popular and widely used underwater communications system in the industry.
